Chechen traffic police found a $1 million Rolls-Royce that was stolen in Moscow in 2007 and returned it to its rightful owner, the Chechen Interior Ministry said Thursday.

The Rolls-Royce Phantom sedan was placed on a federal stolen-car list, and its owner, a Moscow businessman whose name was withheld, hired private investigators to find it, the ministry said in a statement.

The car was found by Grozny police who stopped it for a routine document check, the ministry said, without elaborating whether the Rolls-Royce's new owner faced any penalties.
