Anna Chapman, a member of the Russian spy ring deported by the United States in July, is writing a book on the potential of the Internet, said the bank that hired her as an adviser.

Chapman is also working on a project related to space exploration, FondServisBank said in a statement posted on its web site Monday, without elaborating.

The bank, which describes itself as “strategically orientated toward boosting the domestic economy” through investments in aerospace and other high-technology industries, said it hired Chapman last week.
