

Space Tickets to Go on Sale

January 13, 2011

The  Moscow Times

Space Adventures, a U.S. company that arranges space tourism, has agreed with Russian space officials to expand flight opportunities starting in 2013, after a 2009 voyage by Cirque du Soleil's founder sparked demand.

Three seats for flights to the international space station will become available after Russia adds a fifth Soyuz spacecraft to the current four per year, the company said in a statement. Cirque du Soleil founder Guy Laliberte, the seventh space tourist to fly to the station aboard a Soyuz, paid $35 million to spend nine days on the station in 2009.

(Bloomberg)

Original url: <https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2011/01/13/space-tickets-to-go-on-sale-a4211>