LONDON — Rosneft is looking to tap the international lending market for a sizeable syndicated loan only six weeks after agreeing to an increased $2 billion loan, bankers close to the borrower said.✕

"On an annual basis, depending on what's going on, Rosneft's financing need is anywhere from $15 billion upward. So, a $2 billion deal on its own is not such a big deal for them," one banker said.

Other bankers warned Europe's weakened macroeconomic outlook means sourcing liquidity for a new loan so shortly after Rosneft's $2 billion deal in early December could pose a challenge. "They have to find out where that liquidity exists," another banker said.✕Rosneft was not immediately available to comment.
