

E. Coli Found in Butter in Samara Kindergartens

March 15, 2012

The  Moscow Times

E. Coli bacteria has been found in butter at four kindergartens in the city of Samara, following the hospitalization this week of almost 30 children in the neighboring city of Tolyatti from food poisoning, Itar-Tass reported Friday.

The bacteria was discovered during a food safety check initiated after a raft of food-poisoning cases in Tolyatti, which were apparently caused by dairy products, including tvorog and kefir. In total, 37 children under the age of two fell ill, with 28 of them being hospitalized.

A criminal investigation has been opened in connection with the Tolyatti poisonings, with the charge of failing to meet safety standards in work with young children.

In the E. Coli case in Samara, authorities plan to charge the butter supplier with an administrative offense.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2012/03/15/e-coli-found-in-butter-in-samara-kindergartens-a13335>