

On Vacation, Yanukovych Signs Russian-Language Law

August 08, 2012

KIEV — President Viktor Yanukovych on Wednesday signed into law a bill that will make Russian the official language in parts of Ukraine, ignoring opponents who have warned it risks splitting the country.

Yanukovych's Party of the Regions rushed the bill through parliament last month in what opponents saw as an attempt to rally public support in Russian-speaking regions ahead of October parliamentary elections.

The move led to street protests in Kiev and brawls in the parliament as the opposition, which fears it will lead to the status of Ukrainian as the state language being eroded, fought to block it.

But Yanukovych, who is on holiday in Crimea, took advantage of the lack of political activity in the summer lull to sign it into law.

A statement by the presidential administration said he had instructed his government to take the necessary steps to adopt local legislation to take account of the new law.

Opposition politicians, including jailed former Prime Minister Yulia Tymoshenko and one-time Foreign Minister Arseny Yatseniuk, whose two parties have united to fight an Oct. 28 election together, have described the bill as a "crime against the state" that could set citizens at each other's throats.

"Yanukovych has managed to do everything that the Russian emperors and the Soviet general secretaries could not do. He has passed a death sentence on the Ukrainian language," Oleg Medvedev, an opposition political strategist, said Wednesday.

When Yanukovych signed the law Wednesday, he also set up a body to promote the use of Ukrainian.
