British department store group Debenhams expects to generate a fifth of its overseas sales by 2015 in Russia, which is set to become Europe's biggest retail market.

Debenhams, which has been increasing sales at home despite a recession there, returned to Russia in September, six years after pulling out of the country because it was losing money.

Russia\(\mathbb{Z}\) is \(\mathbb{E}\) Europe's second-biggest retail market, with sales of $621 billion last year, according to data consultancy Euromonitor, and it is on track to become the biggest by 2013 or 2014.

"Russia\substantial should be a massive success story for anyone who comes here," Francis McAuley, the company's international director, said last week.

"Yes, it's volatile, but everyone's volatile in the world right now. I have high hopes for Russia."

International retailers have long been trying to establish themselves in ■Russia, though many have struggled. ■France's Carrefour pulled out after only four months in 2009.

Debenhams, Britain's No. 2 department store group by sales, behind■John Lewis, has about 170 domestic stores and franchises in 27 countries.

McAuley said ■Russia ■could generate 20 percent of Debenhams' international turnover.
