

Medvedev Talks Tough on Hooligans

By The Moscow Times

November 25, 2012

The  Moscow Times

In a desperate attempt to curb football violence in Russia, Prime Minister Dmitry Medvedev on Monday called for the most notorious hooligans to be banned for life from matches.

A Russian league game between Dynamo Moscow and Zenit St. Petersburg was called off last week after the Dynamo goalkeeper was injured when a firecracker was thrown from the Zenit stands.

More than 90 people were briefly detained after the match, but no one has been charged. Dynamo was given a 3-0 win.

In the wake of disturbances at the Dynamo-Zenit game, the government drafted a bill to introduce harsh penalties for misbehaving fans, such as temporary suspensions. But on Monday, Medvedev urged the government to go further and introduce lifetime bans.

Related articles:

- Medvedev Condemns Firecracker Thrower
- Soccer Game Stopped After Firework Injures Player
- Soccer Fans Fume to Putin

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2012/11/25/medvedev-talks-tough-on-hooligans-a19673>