

Russia, U.S. to Boost Law Enforcement Cooperation

By The Moscow Times

May 23, 2013

The  Moscow Times

Russia and the United States may set up joint working groups to counter emerging crime threats, Russia's Interior Minister said at the end of a working visit to the United States.

US and Russian officials agreed the two nations need to create working groups to help stand against "new international challenges and threats," including cyber-crime, sexual exploitation of minors and smuggling, Kolokolstev said at the end of his visit on Thursday.

He made the statement after meeting the head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Robert Mueller, and US Department of Homeland Security, Janet Napolitano, earlier this week.

"As well as our US colleagues, we see a lot of areas of common interest in cooperation between the Interior Ministry and FBI," Kolokoltsev told reporters.

Related articles:

- Clues Sought in Twin Car Bombings in Dagestan \(Video\)
- Top Cop Says Moscow Safer Than New York
- UN Asks Russia for More Peacekeepers

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2013/05/23/russia-us-to-boost-law-enforcement-cooperation-a243>