

Russia's Ahn Going For Gold in Short Skate

By The Moscow Times

February 10, 2014

Viktor Ahn, a three-time Olympic champion.

Team Russia's Viktor Ahn will go for gold in the men's 1,500-meter short skate after finishing second in the short track qualifiers.

Ahn, a three-time Olympic champion, will take to the ice at 16:05 on Monday after posting a time of 2:16:000 in the semi-finals.

The skater — a native of Seoul, South Korea — competed for years under his home flag, before switching nationalities in 2011, citing conflicts and a lack of support from his management team. It was during this time that Ahn changed his name from Hyun Soo to the more Russian-sounding "Viktor."

"It was my father who searched the Internet for a possible destination ... I could have moved to America but ended up" in Russia. "Please, don't get me wrong — I have no regrets," Ahn said, Reuters reported.

Russia is hoping that the inclusion of Ahn will significantly boost their medal prospects in the short-track skate, having only ever won one Olympic medal in the event.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2014/02/10/russias-ahn-going-for-gold-in-short-skate-a31906>