

St. Petersburg Battles Crumbling Buildings With 6 Binoculars

By The Moscow Times

June 04, 2014

St. Petersburg administration battles crumbling buildings with binoculars.

Officials in St. Petersburg have come up with a cunning plan to protect residents from being hit on the head by falling plaster — scouting buildings with binoculars — though it seems the city budget would only allow for 6 pairs.

The "visual" prevention plan comes after two people were injured by falling rubble in March, the head of the city's housing committee Valery Shiyan said, Itar-tass reported Wednesday.

The six binoculars come in at a total sum of 5,000 rubles ($140), Itar-Tass said, citing the committee's press service.

On a more positive note, the housing head added there had been no reports of people being injured by falling icicles over the winter or spring months.

See also:

St. Petersburg Administration Lists 73 Urban Planning Mistakes

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2014/06/04/st-petersburg-battles-crumbling-buildings-with-6-binoculars-a36166>