Former U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said in an interview with U.S. television network ABC that she has moved beyond the painful chapters in her life and is showing signs that she may wish to take on her Republican critics in the 2016 presidential race.

During the interview, Clinton was asked about recent comments by President Vladimir Putin, who said that she had never been "too graceful in her statements." The former first lady said Putin was "not the first male leader who has made a sexist comment like that."
