ST. PETERSBURG, Russia – The Central Bank head Elvira Nabiullina said on Tuesday that the ruble's long-term stability could be ensured only by curbing capital flight.

"The ruble's long-term stability is possible only by lowering the outflow of capital," Nabiullina told a Central Bank conference in St. Petersburg.

She added that capital flight from Russia this year would remain high. According to official forecasts, net capital outflow should reach around $100 billion this year.
