

Naomi Campbell's Russian Tycoon Ex Loses Hotel Company Power Struggle

By The Moscow Times

July 15, 2014

Russian tycoon Vladislav Doronin and British supermodel Naomi Campbell.

A London high court has ruled that the Russian ex-boyfriend of British supermodel Naomi Campbell must stand down as CEO of luxury villa operator Amanresorts, a position he assumed during a power struggle with the company's other partner, The Wall St. Journal reported Monday.

Russian tycoon Vladislav Doronin and U.S. entrepreneur Omar Amanat bought Amanresorts International, which has 26 high-end resorts worldwide, for $358 million earlier this year, but the pair fell out when Doronin, 51, announced in May that he would take over the role of CEO from Adrian Zecha, the Indonesia-born hotelier who founded the company in 1988.

Amanat said that Doronin, founder of Moscow-based property development company Capital Group, did not have the backing of the U.K.-incorporated company's board when removing Zecha, 81, and took him to court, the report said.

A high court judge on Monday sided with Amanat and Zecha, reinstating the latter as CEO of Amanresorts, which can charge more than $1,000 per night for rooms in its lavish bungalows.

Following the ruling, Amanat said he was glad that Zecha, a former journalist for Time magazine, was CEO again and that he would be given the chance to "retire in a manner of his own choosing," according to The Wall St. Journal.

Doronin — who was in a relationship with Campbell between 2008 and 2013, despite still being technically married to his long-estranged wife at the time — said that he would challenge the court's decision.

See also:

Planet Hospitality to Sink \$100 Million Into Accommodation for World Cup

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2014/07/15/naomi-campbells-russian-tycoon-ex-loses-hotel-company-power-struggle-a37325>