

250 Doomed 1950's Apartment Blocks Remain

By The Moscow Times

July 21, 2014

The  Moscow Times

A 15-year-old plan to flatten more than 1,500 of Moscow's five-story apartment blocks is edging toward the finishing line, with only about 250 of the doomed buildings still waiting for the wrecking ball to put them out of their misery, Mayor Sergei Sobyenin said, RIA Novosti reported Monday.

Sobyenin added that 116 of the city's Khrushchyovki — a common term for the apartment blocks, which were built in the late-1950s and early 1960s under the reign of then-leader of the Soviet Union Nikita Khrushchev — will be flattened this year.

A further 130 will be wiped out next year, said Marat Khusnullin, one of Sobyenin's deputies.

In 1999, then-Mayor Yury Luzhkov ordered 1,722 of the relics, which were only supposed to last for 25 years, to be demolished by 2010, but the 2008 to 2009 economic crisis put the brakes on the city's plans.

See also:

\$48 Billion Needed to Resolve Housing Issues

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2014/07/21/250-doomed-1950s-apartment-blocks-remain-a37531>