The Moscow Times
30 YEARS
INDEPENDENT NEWS FROM RUSSIA

Russian Boys Fight the Heat by Turning Living Room Into Swimming Pool

By The Moscow Times

August 01, 2014

With the thermometer set to hit 34 degrees Celsius in Moscow on Friday, two Russians have come up with a novel way of battling the heat: turning their living room into a private swimming pool.

Photos uploaded to social networks show the boys bathing in the homemade paddling pool, which was constructed using a basic tarpaulin and held in place by Scotch tape, technology information website Onliner reported Thursday.

dimka_jd / livejournal

The boys, who hail from the Oryol region about 350 kilometers southwest of Moscow, where temperatures rose above 30 C this week according to the weather bureau, were seemingly oblivious to their unconventional setting as they posed for pool snaps amongst a radiator, some curtains and a chandelier.

It was not immediately clear how the boys planned to drain the water from their living room pool, nor whether the homeowner had consented to the bath's construction.

See also:

Russian Employers Obliged to Cut Working Hours If Heat Above 30.5 C

Original url:
https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2014/08/01/russian-boys-fight-the-heat-by-turning-living-room-into-swimming-pool-a37910