

Russia's Hard Currency Reserves Down $50Bln

By The Moscow Times

October 09, 2014

The  Moscow Times

Sanctions-hit Russia has lost around a tenth of hard currency reserves so far this year in dollar terms, bucking a generally rising trend across most emerging markets.

Russian reserves stood at $457 billion by end-September, compared with $510 billion at the end of 2013 and $515 billion a year ago, because of hefty ruble-supportive interventions during the Crimea crisis earlier this year.

Russian reserves also edged down by the equivalent of $20 billion in the third quarter, primarily due to valuation effects. Around 40 percent of its reserves are in euros. The currency fell 8 percent versus the dollar between July and September.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2014/10/09/russias-hard-currency-reserves-down-50bln-a40261>