

U.S. Investigators Rule Out Russian Cyberattack on Chase Bank

By The Moscow Times

October 21, 2014

People walk inside JP Morgan headquarters in New York.

WASHINGTON — The Russian government has been ruled out as sponsor of a cyber attack on JPMorgan Chase & Co disclosed in August, U.S. law enforcement officials have said.

Officials from the FBI and Secret Service told a news conference at the Financial Services Roundtable in Washington that authorities believe the attack was the work of cybercriminals

Early news reports in August said that investigators feared the attack was conducted on behalf of the Russian government as retribution for economic sanctions imposed by the U.S.

"There is no indication this was the result of sanctions," said Joseph Demarest, assistant director of the FBI's cyber division.

The bank has said the names and contact information of some 83 million customers were accessed, making it one of the largest breaches to date based on the number of records compromised. Yet there is no evidence that account numbers, passwords, user IDs, birth dates or Social Security numbers had been stolen.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2014/10/21/us-investigators-rule-out-russian-cyberattack-on-chase-bank-a40596>