

Lavrov Hits Back at Obama Over State of Union Speech

January 21, 2015

U.S. President Barack Obama delivers his State of the Union address to a joint session of Congress on Capitol Hill in Washington, Jan. 20, 2015.

Russia hit back on Wednesday at U.S. President Barack Obama's State of the Union speech, saying it showed the United States believes it is "number one" and seeks world domination.

Obama said his country was upholding "the principle that bigger nations can't bully the small" by opposing what he called Russian aggression and supporting democracy in Ukraine. Russia, he said, was isolated and its economy was "in tatters."

"The Americans have taken the course of confrontation and do not assess their own steps critically at all," Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov told a news conference.

"Yesterday's speech by the president shows that at the center of the (U.S.) philosophy is only one thing: 'We are number one and everyone else has to respect that.' ... It shows that the United States wants all the same to dominate the world and cannot merely be first among equals."

This phase would pass, Lavrov said, but added that it would take time.

"I would prefer all countries to adopt the philosophy of cooperation, not 'diktat', " he said.

Relations between Russia and the United States have sunk to their lowest level since the end of the Cold War, mainly because of Moscow's confrontation with the West over the crisis in Ukraine.
