

Swiss FIFA Case Has 28 New 'Money Laundering' Acts to Study in Connection With Russia, Qatar World Cups

By The Moscow Times

July 12, 2015

BERN — Swiss federal prosecutors have new evidence of 28 acts of possible money laundering linked to FIFA's 2018 and 2022 World Cup bid contests.

The office of Switzerland's attorney general says it now has 81 "suspicious activity reports" filed by banks in the country.

Attorney-General Michael Lauber said last month his team had 53 suspicious incidents to study in a "huge and complex case."

Swiss prosecutors are working with a separate United States probe of racketeering and bribery implicating senior FIFA officials.

Though Lauber's case focuses on the 2018–2022 contests won by Russia and Qatar, respectively, he said it could include other FIFA business.

His office says Sunday that all new reports "are related to the [attorney general's] investigation into the allocation of the football World Cups 2018 and 2022."

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2015/07/12/swiss-fifa-case-has-28-new-money-laundering-acts-to-study-in-connection-with-russia-qatar-world-cups-a48087>