The most expensive Moscow mansion currently on the rental market can be had for 2 million rubles ($29,000) per month, news website Gazeta.ru reported earlier this month, citing a press release from the Inkom-Nedvizhimost real estate company. The property owners are considering selling the property, according to the report.

The 1040-square-meter mansion is located on Bolshaya Tatarskaya Ulitsa, in close proximity to the Novokuznetskaya metro station, the report said. It features amenities such as central air conditioning, a sauna, gym, an underground parking space and a grand fireplace.

"This object has set the record this year: it is two times more expensive than it was a month ago," the press release said.
