Antikvarny Boutique & Bar

Ramen House

Innovative Asian takeout

Ramen House is the first pop-up cafe of the Mestnaya Yeda (Local Food) project. The Japanese take-out joint is located on the ground floor of the Rossiya concert hall, next to the flagship Chaikhona #1, a partner in this new venture. The main attraction is the sushirito — an innovative cross between sushi and — you guessed it — a burrito. The pork ramen is also pretty good (250 rubles).

Antikvarny Boutique & Bar

The best kept secret in town

Ring the doorbell of this discreet basement venue to discover the hybrid of an antique shop, private members' club and upscale eatery. Antikvarny's interior was designed by Natalya Belonogova, and all of the furnishings — mostly from the 1950s and 1960s — can be purchased by guests. The venue transitions seamlessly from coffee shop to cocktail bar to fancy restaurant depending on your mood.

Corner Burger

For the carnivores of Moscow

In a city saturated with gourmet burger bars, Corner Burger stands out for its wide selection of dishes, creative taste combinations and drinks menu. This second branch opened on the site of the Montalto pizzeria, and you can still order pizza from the new eatery if you wish. Chow down on a burger with mango, cherries and goat's cheese (650 rubles), for a taste you won't find in McDonald's, or opt for the Slider Trio (700 rubles) for miniature bites of the restaurant's best burgers.
