Fraud Caught on Camera: Election Results Annulled in Rostov-on-Don Polling Station

September 19, 2016

Russian officials have annulled election results from a polling station in the country's southern region of Rostov-on-Don after a video of election fraud in Sunday's parliamentary elections went viral.

The clip shows two women attempting to screen their colleague from view as she stuffs votes into a ballot box.

The chairman of the Rostov region election commission, Sergei Yusov, said that there was

“every reason to believe” that the vote had been tampered with.

The head of the Central Election Commission, Ella Pamfilova, earlier confirmed
that a criminal investigation had b een opened into the case.

The ruling United Russia party secured a landslide in the elections, gaining a 343-seat majority in Russia's lower house of parliament, the 450-seat State Duma, after 94 percent of the vote had been counted. The Communist Party, Liberal Democrat Party (LDPR), and A Just Russia party also gained seats.
