

Russia Threatens to Shoot Down U.S. Aircraft in Syria

October 06, 2016

Defense Ministry

As reports that the⊠Obama administration are, once again, considering launching airstrikes against Syrian President Bashar Assad, the Russian Defense⊠Ministry on Thursday issued a clear warning that it will shoot down⊠American aircraft if such a campaign was launched.

The statement comes just days after reports that Moscow had deployed additional S-300 surface-to-air missile batteries to its air base in the Assad-controlled Syrian region of Latakia. Russia is in Syria providing air support to Assad's forces, as they battle to retake positions to the east.

"Let me remind the \B[so-called] American 'strategists': the Russian military bases in \B[Latakia] and Tartus are covered by S-400 and S-300 air defense \Bsystems, the range of which may come as a surprise to unidentified \Bflying objects."

The advertised range of the S-400 and S-300 systems are 300 kilometers and 200 kilometers, ≥respectively.

Dialogue between the ■United States and Russia in Syria has in the past week completely ■broken down, with hopes for a renewed cease-fire falling to the ■wayside. Russia, meanwhile, is supporting a renewed Assad-led assault ■on the opposition holdout of Aleppo.

Original url:

 $https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2016/10/06/russia-threatens-to-shoot-down-us-aircraft-in-syria-a55\,639\$