Republican Party candidate Donald Trump is Russia's favorite to win the U.S. presidential elections, a survey by the state-backed Public Opinion Fund (FOM) pollster has revealed.

Some 44 percent of respondents said that a Trump victory would be in Russia's interests, while just 7 percent backed Democrat candidate Hillary Clinton.

Twenty-three percent said that the \Boutcome would not matter for Russia, with another 27 percent \Bstruggling to answer.

The majority of respondents (61\( \textbf{percent} \)) held negative views of Clinton, the survey found. \( \textbf{Thirty-eight percent} \) of those surveyed said that ties between Moscow\( \textbf{a} \) and Washington would suffer if Clinton entered the White House, while \( \textbf{35} \) percent said relations would remain unchanged. Only 8 percent\( \textbf{v} \) viewed Clinton positively, and one in ten claimed that Russia's relations with the U.S. would improve.

While 38⊠ percent of Russians rated
Trump⊠ positively, one in five said that they held negative views. Thirty-seven⊠ percent said that U.S-Russian relations would improve if the⊠Republican took office, with 38 percent foreseeing no change. Just 6⊠ percent said that Respondents also believed that Trump\would ultimately win the election. Thirty-six percent said\wtat the businessman would enter the Oval Office, compared to 31\widetilde{\waterightarrow} percent who believed in a Clinton victory.

The U.S presidential elections will be ■held on Nov. 8.
