Eight armed individuals robbed a bank in east Moscow on Thursday evening. According to the TASS news agency, the robbers stole 2 million rubles ($31,300) from the vault of United National Bank, whose license had been revoked by the Central Bank in early October.

Police sources say that the masked attackers used non–lethal pistols during the robbery, wounding one of the bank's employees in the hip.

Authorities have announced a city–wide search for the robbers, but so far no arrests have been made.
