

Flamboyant Russian Nationalist Throws Party in Parliament to Celebrate Trump Victory

By Katie Davies, Daria Litvinova and Jim Kovpak

November 09, 2016

Nationalist politician Vladimir Zhininovsky, pictured in a 2012 campaign ad. YouTube

The flamboyant leader of the nationalist LDPR party, Vladimir Zhininovskiy, has thrown a party at Russia's State Duma on Wednesday to celebrate Donald Trump's win in the U.S. presidential election. Zhininovskiy organized a reception with champagne, and sweets, sausages and traditional Russian Olivier salad worth more than 100,000 rubles ($1,560), the RBC news website reported.

Earlier on Wednesday, news that Republican billionaire Donald Trump would become next U.S. president was greeted by thunderous applause in Russia's State Duma, Russian media have reported.

Embed:

Russian MP Zhirinovsky celebrating Trump's victory with champagne today in the State Duma (via @ru_rbc) pic.twitter.com/pcxJtwKx2y

— Ivan Nechepurenko (@INechepurenko) November 9, 2016

The businessman snatched victory from his Democrat opponent Hillary Clinton in the early hours of Wednesday morning in the United States, as Russia's lower house of parliament gathered for its morning session.

In his telegram to the new U.S. leader, Russian President Vladimir Putin wished Trump "every success" in his new role.

Putin also expressed his hopes that new administration would work to pull Russian-American relations out of their current crisis, the Kremlin's official website announced. The president said that he hoped Trump's appointment would "lead to constructive dialogue between Moscow and Washington based on equality and respect, benefiting not only the interests of their respective countries, but the world as a whole."

Embed:

Vladimir Putin congratulated Donald Trump on his victory in the US presidential election <https://t.co/JgNJ6DYVLs>

— President of Russia (@KremlinRussia_E) November 9, 2016

Putin went on to congratulate Trump for a second time at a reception with foreign ambassadors on Wednesday afternoon.

"During the campaign, we heard statements from Trump about restoring relationships between the United States and Russia. We understand and acknowledge that will be a difficult process, considering how far Russia-U.S. relations have deteriorated. As I have already repeated multiple times, that is not [Russia's] fault," Putin said.

The president stressed that Russia was ready and willing to "do its part" in a bid to restore ties. "Both the Russian and the American people could benefit," he said.

Embed:

Putin: "This would serve the interest of the Russian and American peoples." Says both have "special responsibility" for global security.

— max seddon (@maxseddon) November 9, 2016

Other prominent Russian figures also rushed to congratulate Trump, who has long been seen as the Kremlin's preferred choice in the White House. The governor of Russia's Siberian region of Omsk even declared at a meeting of Russia's Federation Council that Putin's United Russia had "won the U.S. election," according to reports.

Sergei Zheleznyak, the deputy secretary of the general council of Putin's ruling United Russia party, claimed that the vote proved that people were "tired of the artificial confrontation and the imposed globalization."

He blamed the defeat of Democrat nominee Hillary Clinton on "bellicose rhetoric, rabid anti-Russian hysteria, the desire to dictate America's will to the world and to solve problems at the expense of American wallets."

"We respect America's choice and look forward to building a constructive relationship with the new U.S. leadership on the basis of equal dialogue and cooperation," Zheleznyak said in a statement on the party's website.

Zhirinovskiy also blamed Clinton's loss on her anti-Russia rhetoric.

"We are, of course, very happy to see that the better of the two candidates won," Zhirinovskiy was quoted by the state-run RIA Novosti news agency. "Hillary threatened war: for her, Russia was the main enemy. Most Americans simply want peace."

"Go on, Grandma Hillary," he said. "It's time for you to have a rest."

Embed:

pic.twitter.com/kRcPMXZUta

— @nikbatalov November 9, 2016

Photo: Flowers laid outside the U.S. embassy in Moscow on the morning after the election. The sign, a parody of the "Je Suis Charlie" placards which pledged solidarity with France in the wake of the Charlie Hedbo terror attacks, reads "I am the USA."

Some felt that Vladimir Putin may have found a good match in the outsider candidate.

Putin was informed when the result of the election was clear, but "he wasn't glued to the TV -- he's the president of Russia!", Peskov says

— Jack Farchy (@jfarchy) November 9, 2016

Russia's Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov was concise. He promised that Moscow will “judge” the new president by his actions. “I can't say that all the previous leaders were predictable in every situation – it's part of life, part of politics. ... We've heard a lot of words, but we will judge [the new White House administration] by their actions, and respond with actions, too,” Lavrov told the state-run TASS news agency.

Russia “is ready to work with whoever is the president,” he said.

The longtime leader of Russia’s Communist party Gennady Zyuganov maintained that neither Trump, nor Clinton were "good" for Russia. “No matter who won there, it’s six of one, half a dozen of the other,” Zyuganov said at a press conference in the party headquarters. “The American strategy has remained the same for the past 200 years: expansion, asserting their priority and seizing the most important global resources,” he said.

Margarita Simonyan, head of the state-funded RT TV channel, claimed that the Western political classes were simply out of step with ordinary people.

Embed:

Ð¸Ð³/¼Ñ¸Ð±Ð,Ð½. Ð¸Ñ¸ÐµÐ°Ð,Ñ¸. Ð¸Ñ¸Ð°Ð¼Ð¼Ñ¸Ñ¸ Ð²Ð³/¼Ð¸Ñ¸Ñ¸Ñ¸? Ð¸Ð,Ñ¸ Ñ¸Ð³/¼Ñ¸Ð½Ð½¸ Ð³/¼Ñ¸ Ð,Ñ¸Ñ¸ÐµÐ±Ð»Ð,Ñ¸Ð¼Ð½Ð°Ð°, Ð³/¼Ñ¸ ÐµÐ³Ð³/¼ Ð²Ñ¸Ð°Ð½Ñ¸Ñ¸, Ð³/¼Ñ¸ ÐµÐ³Ð³/¼ Ð²Ñ¸Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð,Ñ¸ Ð²Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð³/¼Ð°Ð¼Ñ¸Ð½Ð½¸ Ð;Ð¸Ð¸.

— Ð°Ð°Ñ¸Ð°Ð°Ñ¸Ð° Ð,Ñ¸Ð° Ð;Ð,Ð¼¼Ð³/¼Ð½Ñ¸Ñ¸Ð½Ð½¸ (@M_Simonyan) November 9, 2016

"[British political leader, Jeremy] Corbyn. Brexit. Trump. Does anyone still have any doubts? The world is sick of the establishment, and the lies it tells through its arrogant mainstream media," she said on Twitter. "People are tired of war. They're tired of the mass media. They're tired of aggressive liberalism. They're tired of immigrants. Whether it's good or bad, it's simply a fact."

Former Russian Finance Minister Alexei Kudrin also drew parallels with Brexit, calling Trump's election a "continuation of the same trend."

"The American elections have shown that the current dynamics of global processes are unsatisfactory," Kudrin wrote on Twitter on Wednesday. "But despite some of the

