At Ruski, 85 floors above the city, the food and spectacular view vie for diners' attention. RUSKI / FACEBOOK

Ruski is a new restaurant on the 85th floor of OKO, the highest skyscraper in the Moskva City neighborhood. Part of the 354 Exclusive Height project created by two restaurant empires — Chaikhona #1 and GINZA — and several independent restaurateurs, Ruski combines carefully researched traditional Russian dishes with contemporary Russian cuisine. Designed by Megre Interiors, Ruski boasts an 8-meter high traditional Russian oven and tables made of agate and wood.

Taking up the perimeter of the 85th floor, Ruski⊠commands truly incredible views — but they⊠shouldn't distract you from enjoying the food.⊠Start with forshmak, an Ashkenazi Jewish herring⊠appetizer served on tiny pieces of rye bread toast⊠(340 rubles), or potato pancakes with marinated korushka, a Baltic Sea fish immensely popular in St. Petersburg (360 rubles).

Another great starter is kulebyaka, hot,⊠oblong-shaped Russian pie with red and white⊠fish, or beef pirozhki, small pies prepared in the⊠traditional oven. Continue with traditional pelmeni⊠dumplings with venison (430 rubles), millet porridge⊠with pumpkin and crab meat (430 rubles) or⊠lightly smoked salmon (940 rubles).

Don't forget to sample some homemade⊠infused vodka. The vodkas are divided into two⊠categories: cordials and so-called "marinated vodkas"⊠(270 rubles for 50 ml). The former are less⊠strong and sweeter — try rosehip or black currant⊠ — while the latter are 80-proof with flavors⊠like porcini mushrooms, buckwheat or galangal (a⊠type of ginger) with strawberry.

There are also original cocktails (470 rubles).⊠Try one of the "imperial drinks," each named after⊠a Russian emperor. Elizabeth I is made of calvados,⊠apple, lavender and blackberry, and there's⊠a story behind it. The empress was allergic to⊠apples, hence the second name of the cocktail:⊠ "forbidden fruit." Borodinsky refers to the eponymous⊠popular black bread — it's a mix of polugar⊠(an 18th century version of vodka), Campari, beetroot⊠and homemade bread cordial.

Above Ruski is the highest open patio-transformer⊠in Europe, which currently serves as the⊠highest skating rink. Be sure to check out the⊠rink and the viewing platform, weather permitting.⊠
