"[Grits] injured the journalist, but explained that he had no intent to kill," the Interfax news agency quoted an investigator telling a Moscow court.

Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov told reporters on a conference call on Tuesday that Felgenhauer was attacked by a "madman."

He categorically denied allegations the stabbing attack was influenced by the state-funded Russia-24 television channel, which accused Felgenhauer and Ekho Moskvyy of anti-Russian coverage.

"Trying to connect this to something, painting it in a certain color, is absolutely illogical and wrong," Peskov was cited by the Interfax news agency as saying.

According to preliminary accounts, the attacker, who is suspected to suffer from a psychiatric condition, had personal motives.

But colleagues close to Felgenhauer have blamed state media, pointing to a general atmosphere of hostility toward journalists who are critical of the Kremlin. Ekho Moskvyy is among a handful of remaining Kremlin-critical media outlets in the country.
