

Russian Sculptor Wants to Gift Putin-Bear Statue to the President

November 16, 2017

Screenshot Youtube

A local sculptor wants to gift President Vladimir Putin a statue depicting the president's head atop the body of a bear with angel wings and holding a fish in its paws.

The forged iron figure — dubbed “Mind, Strength and Soul” and sculpted over several months — is a metaphor for Russia, the sculptor told Astrakhan-based news website KaspyInfo.ru.

Viktor Korpachyov said that the sturgeon in Putin's hands is a take on Astrakhan's regional symbol. The eagle that the bear is stepping on symbolizes Russia's enemies, he added.

Embed:

A man from Astrakhan made this sculpture of Putin as a winged bear holding a fish and named it “Mind, strength and soul.” I mean pic.twitter.com/TsM19yxZWz

— Anna Shamanska (@_shamanska) November 16, 2017

Although Korpachyov wanted to exhibit the monument formally, it is standing in an outdoor courtyard of a local residence.

In 2008, the Moscow City Duma monuments commission rejected a proposal to build a Putin statue in central Moscow, with one official saying it was a question for "future generations."

Four years earlier, sculptor Zurab Tsereteli crafted a statue of Putin in a judo outfit. The offering was coldly received by the Kremlin and was left to stand in the artist's personal gallery.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2017/11/16/russian-sculptor-wants-to-gift-putin-bear-statue-to-the-president-a59590>