

Russian Ambassador Denies Election Meddling in Mexico

January 09, 2018

Jose Antonio Meade, presidential pre-candidate, Mexico (Daniel Becerril / Reuters)

Russia's ambassador to Mexico has denied allegations that his country is attempting to interfere in the Mexican presidential elections as "foolish."

U.S. National Security Advisor Herbert McMaster accused Russia last month of launching a "sophisticated effort" to sow divisions ahead of Mexico's presidential election next July. The U.S. intelligence community has previously accused Russia of interfering in the 2016 U.S. presidential elections.

Related article: Russia Accuses CIA Director of Lying About Election Meddling

"This is foolish, someone needs to keep this subject afloat, that's why they're trying to promote it," Russia's Ambassador to Mexico Eduard Malayan told the state-run RIA Novosti news agency.

In an interview published early Tuesday, Malayan maintained that Moscow “has absolutely no intentions or even a reason” to meddle in Mexican affairs.

His comments came a day after Russia’s Foreign Ministry denounced CIA chief Mike Pompeo for “lying” that the Kremlin had been trying to interfere in the U.S. elections for decades.

“They’d better think about their own actions in this country [Mexico],” Malayan advised the U.S.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2018/01/09/russian-ambassador-denies-election-meddling-in-mexico-a60137>