

Russia to Expand 'Blacklist' of Americans in Response to Sanctions

By Reuters

March 16, 2018

Russia's Deputy Foreign Minister Sergei Ryabkov Denis Sinyakov / Reuters

Moscow will respond to a new set of U.S. sanctions by expanding its "blacklist" of Americans, Russian Deputy Foreign Minister Sergei Ryabkov said on Friday, according to the state-run RIA news agency.

The U.S. Treasury slapped sanctions on 19 Russian citizens and five entities on Thursday in the most significant steps the United States has taken against Russia since U.S. President Donald Trump took office.

"From the very beginning, we use the principle of parity on the number of people included in sanction lists. So we will expand our 'blacklist' with another group of Americans," Ryabkov was cited as saying.

Related article: Britain Poisoned Double Agent Skripal to 'Nourish Russophobia' — Russian State Media

He added that Moscow did not rule out extra measures in response to new sanctions for alleged interfering in U.S. elections and cyber attacks, which Russia denies.

Moscow still wants to maintain a dialogue with Washington and takes counter-measures due to "American political stubbornness," RIA cited the diplomat as saying.

"Those [American] politicians are playing with fire by destroying Russian-American relationship because simultaneously they shake global stability," Ryabkov said, according to RIA.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2018/03/16/russia-to-expand-blacklist-of-americans-a60833>