

Moscow Mayor Thanks Leader of Cossacks Accused of Whipping Opposition

November 02, 2018

Ilya Varlamov

Moscow Mayor Sergei Sobyanin has issued a statement thanking the leader of a group of Cossacks that was accused of publicly flogging anti-government protesters earlier this year.

The Cossacks, an imperial cavalry force from Russia's southern steppes, have been revived in a number of patriotic organizations across Russia since the collapse of the Soviet Union.

Sobyanin on Friday thanked Andrei Shustrov, the head of the Central Cossack Battalion, for his "active participation in socially significant public events in Moscow," according to a statement published on the website of Moscow's City Hall.

Last May, Shustrov had reportedly been part of a group of Cossacks that had been filmed attacking protesters at a rally against President Vladimir Putin's inauguration in Moscow.

Related article: Those Guys With Whips? They're Cossacks Meant to Keep you Safe at Russia's World Cup

"I was there with my family. I live in Moscow. So what?," the Cossack leader told the Daily Storm news outlet days after the protest.

Moscow City Hall has reportedly funded Cossacks groups in recent years to hold training sessions on public safety as well as do "social work" aimed at the city's homeless.

Cossacks were also employed by the authorities to patrol the streets during the 2018 football World Cup .

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2018/11/02/moscow-mayor-thanks-leader-of-cossacks-accused-of-whipping-opposition-a63393>