

Russians Charged Over $27M in Bribes in 2018, Prosecutors Say

December 18, 2018

Pixabay

Russians have accepted 1.8 billion rubles ($27 million) in bribes that the authorities have cracked down on in the first nine months of this year, federal prosecutors have said.

Anti-corruption activists say official figures vastly underestimate the prevalence of bribery in a country that ranks low in transparency and high in corruption.

Related article: Bribe Taking in Russia Triples in 2017, new Figures Show

“The total amount [of money taken as bribes] totaled 1.8 billion rubles” between January and September, Alexander Kurennoy, a spokesman for the General Prosecutor’s Office, said Tuesday.

He noted that bribe-giving and taking rose by 3 percent to 10,179 cases this year.

Prosecutions for facilitating bribery grew by 16 percent, Kurennoy added.

Moscow and the regions of Rostov, Moscow and Chelyabinsk led in a rating of bribe-taking between January and October, according to the prosecutor's office's data.

Bribe-giving cases were most prevalent in the Moscow region, Moscow, and the Krasnodar region.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2018/12/18/russians-charged-over-27-million-bribes-2018-prosecutors-say-a63879>