

Majority of Russians Believe Top Politicians Are Lying to Them – Poll

February 11, 2019

Moskva News Agency

A majority of Russians say that top officials are lying to them about the true state of affairs in the country, according to a new survey released by the independent pollster Levada Center.

Russians' trust in institutions including the presidency, the government, the State Duma and political parties has reached record lows since the government passed unpopular legislation to increase the retirement age late last year. Meanwhile, the publication of optimistic economic data months after the appointment of a new top statistics official sparked skepticism as inflation hit ordinary Russians' pockets in the New Year.

Related article: Russia's Economic Growth Seems Too Good to Be True \(Op-ed\)

According to poll results published by Levada on Monday, 52 percent of Russian respondents said that top officials "always" or "largely" hid the truth when describing the country's economic situation, health care, pensions or the fight against crime.

Distrust in politicians jumped 15 percent from last year and reached a majority for the first time in the eight years that Levada has asked the question in polls. Since 2010, the share of people who say top officials “always” or “largely” tell the truth has nearly halved, from 21 percent in 2010 to 12 percent last year.

“People see their standard of living falling, but the rulers say it’s growing,” the Vedomosti business daily quoted political analyst Nikolai Petrov as saying on Sunday in comments on the poll.

Meanwhile, Russians’ distrust of politicians contrasts with their trust toward regular people, with 37 percent of respondents in the poll saying that a majority of the people around them are truthful most of the time.

Levada sociologist told Vedomosti that “fear of the authorities dates back to Soviet times. That’s why people trust only their closest circle – family and friends.”

Levada conducted the survey among 1,600 respondents in 52 Russian regions between Nov. 22 and Nov. 28.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2019/02/11/majority-russians-believe-top-politicians-are-lying-to-them-poll-a64453>