

Detention of Investor Is an 'Emergency' for Russian Economy, Kudrin Says

By Reuters

February 19, 2019

Alexei Kudrin Mikhail Tereschenko / TASS

The detention in Russia of Baring Vostok's U.S. founder Michael Calvey is an emergency for the Russian economy, former finance minister Alexei Kudrin, now head of the Audit Chamber, said on Monday.

Related article: Why Russia Can Afford to Jail U.S. Investors

"I find this particular situation (to be) an emergency for the economy," Kudrin tweeted. He said Calvey's detention shows Russian President Vladimir Putin's order not to jail people accused of economic crimes was being ignored.

Calvey, a senior partner at Baring Vostok and among Russia's most prominent foreign investors, was detained on Thursday along with other executives after investigators accused them of embezzling 2.5 billion rubles ($37.76 million).

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2019/02/19/detention-of-investor-is-emergency-for-russian-economy-ex-finance-minister-says-a64540>