

On This Day: April 13, 1990

The Soviet Union admitted guilt for the Katyn Massacre

April 13, 2019

On this day, on April 13, 1943, the German army under Adolf Hitler announced the discovery of mass graves near the village of Katyn not far from Smolensk. The Nazis accused the Soviet Union of the mass murder of Polish officers.

For almost five decades, the Soviet Union denied all responsibility, insisting that the murders were committed by the German army.

But on this day, April 13, 1990, the Soviet government issued a statement on TASS accepting responsibility for the murders of nearly 22,000 Polish army and police officers and members of the intelligentsia. The statement expressed the government's deep regret and called the massacre "one of the most heinous crimes of Stalinism."

The officers and civilians had been arrested when the Soviet Union invaded Poland in 1939 and kept in several Soviet prisons. In March 1940 Lavrenty Beria, head of the NKVD (precursor to the KGB) made the case in a note to Josef Stalin that the Polish prisoners were conducting "anti-Soviet agitation" in prisons and represented a threat to the regime. On March 5, 1940, a document signed by Josef Stalin and members of the Politburo sentenced them to death.

The killings took place in April and May, 1940.

Although there have been many attempts by Russian public figures to disprove the admission of guilt, Vladimir Putin, Dmitry Medvedev and the Russian government have continued to condemn the murders as a heinous act of the Stalinist regime.

On April 10, 2010 a military plane carrying the Polish President Lech Kaczynski and his wife Maria, a group of prominent Polish politicians and clerics, and virtually the entire military high command crashed on landing at the Smolensk airport on a visit to commemorate the 70th anniversary of the massacre. All 96 people on board were killed.

April 13 is marked around the world as Katyn Memorial Day.

Original url: <https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2019/04/13/on-this-day-april-13-1990-a65218>