

Half of Russia's Alcohol Sold Illegally, Regulators Say

April 19, 2019

Kirill Zykov / Moskva News Agency

Almost half of the alcohol products sold in Russia last year were on the market illegally, the state Federal Alcohol Market Regulation Service (Rosalkogolregulirovanie) said this week.

Sales of alcoholic beverages in Russia rose by 4.6 percent in 2018, according to Nielsen estimates, while official statistics show a 1.5-percent decline in vodka sales to 786 million liters. Illegal online sales of alcohol rose by 23 percent in Russia, topping $30 million in 2018, according to Moscow-based cybersecurity firm Group-IB.

Related article: Ex-Bootlegger Makes Billions Navigating Putin's Alcohol Barriers

Some 5.2 million out of more than 11 million liters of inspected alcohol were found to be sold in Russia illegally in 2018, Rosalkogolregulirovanie said.

That constitutes 47.5 percent of all inspected alcohol, the agency said in a report ahead of its year-end meeting next week.

Almost 31 percent of vodka, or 363,000 out of 1.18 million liters, was found to be sold illegally in 2018.

Standards watchdog Roskachestvo had named vodka one of Russia's highest-quality products, though it warned that 250 million liters of low-quality vodka are sold in the country annually.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2019/04/19/half-of-russias-alcohol-sold-illegally-regulators-say-a65312>