A matryoshka bear that always bounces back and an ushanka cat with ear flaps will symbolize the Russian Olympic team, web designer Artemy Lebedev's studio has revealed.

One of the many visualizations of the mascots in action shows the blue bear leaning — then righting itself — as the words “doping,” “sanctions” and “scandals” whiz by.

“The bear isn’t just a bear, but also a matryoshka and a roly-poly toy. It never kneels because it simply doesn’t have any knees,” the studio said on Thursday.

“The cat resembles all Russian cats at once: the manul, the Siberian lynx and the snow leopard. It's also an ushanka,” it adds.
