The Russian-Ukrainian border is the only thing left in common between the peoples of the neighboring countries, Ukraine's President-elect Volodymyr Zelenskiy has said in response to remarks from President Vladimir Putin.

Between signing orders that expedite the Russian passport application process for certain categories of Ukrainians, Putin called Russians and Ukrainians "one people" with common "cultural, language and historical traits." Speaking at the Kremlin on Monday after Zelenskiy suggested giving Ukrainian passports to Russians, Putin said the two would benefit from sharing common citizenship.

"The reality is that today, after the annexation of Crimea and the aggression in the Donbass, the only thing we have left in 'common' is the state border," Zelenskiy wrote on Facebook

Thursday.

“And Russia must return control over every millimeter of the Ukrainian side. Only then can we continue searching for ‘commonalities,’” he continued.

Disputing Putin’s words that Russians and Ukrainians are “brotherly” peoples, Zelenskiy said that Moscow’s oil import ban and the capture of Ukrainian sailors in November “doesn’t bring the settlement of relations between our countries one iota closer.”

Putin said on Saturday Moscow was considering offering all Ukrainian citizens fast-tracked Russian passports, a move that angered some politicians in Ukraine, which has been at war with pro-Russian separatists since 2014.

When Putin simplified the procedure for obtaining a Russian passport for residents of separatist-controlled eastern Ukraine last week, Zelenskiy said that Putin should not expect many Ukrainians to take up his offer.

Putin has since signed another decree expanding the list to Ukrainians who once lived in Ukraine's Crimea region before it was annexed in 2014 and citizens of some other countries eligible for fast-tracked Russian passports.
