The seizure makes Cherkalin the richest former law enforcement or security official under investigation for corruption, the Rosbalt news website reported on Friday.

“We suspect that [Cherkalin] received this money from commercial entities, primarily from heads of banks, for general protection,” an unnamed source in the special services was quoted as saying.

Cherkalin, as well as two former colleagues who had been apprehended on fraud charges, may have stashed an additional 12 billion rubles in shell companies, the Kommersant business daily reported.

Cherkalin unseats Dmitry Zakharchenko, the former deputy head of the Interior Ministry's economic security and anti-corruption office, as the richest ex-official to be investigated for corruption. Authorities seized 9 billion rubles from Zakharchenko in 2017, which was valued at around $125 million at the time.

Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov said Cherkalin's indictment is part of routine anti-corruption efforts, not “some sort of unsystematic work.”

On Monday, the Baza Telegram channel published photographs of what it said was Cherkalin's collection of dune buggies, snowmobiles and ATVs.
