

St. Petersburg Drivers Stop for Two Ducks on a Date

May 23, 2019

The  Moscow Times

Residents of St. Petersburg, Russia's "culture capital," proved their sophistication goes beyond humans and extends to other residents of the city, too. Right in the center of a busy road, drivers came to a stop and patiently waited as two ducks (very conscientiously and calmly) waddled their way across a busy street.

Human residents are familiar with the chosen route of the daring duo: The traffic-stoppers were on their way from the Palace Embankment of the Neva River to the Summer Garden, presumably for some well-deserved fun in the fountains.

Here's a look at their afternoon adventure.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2019/05/23/st-petersburg-drivers-stop-for-two-ducks-on-a-date-a65711>