The slain victim was Zelimkhan Khangoshvili, an ethnic Chechen born in Georgia, the republic of Chechnya's Vayfond human rights organization announced over the weekend.

German media reported that Khangoshvili fought in the second Chechen war of 1999-2009 and was fighting a deportation order to keep his asylum claim alive.

He served as a field commander in 2001-2005, Georgia's Human Rights Education and Monitoring Center group said. He had fought on the side of the Chechen resistance against Russian and Chechen government forces, Vayfond said.

Investigators are looking at his death as a "professionally planned and executed contract killing" by a foreign intelligence service, Germany's Der Spiegel news website cited unnamed sources in the security services as saying.

On Aug. 29, the Kommersant business daily reported that the suspect has been identified as Vadim Sergeyevich, a native of Siberia, but withheld his last name. The man was likely carrying fake documents to conceal his identity, Kommersant cited acquaintances of Khangoshvili as saying.

Vayfond compared Khangoshvili's death to the 2010 murder of Chechen refugee Umar Israilov in Austria.

"Khangoshvili may be the latest victim of [Chechen leader Ramzan] Kadyrov's killers in Europe," the organization said.

Khangoshvili had reportedly survived an apparent assassination attempt in Georgia in 2015.

Russia's diplomatic mission in Germany has not yet commented on the suspect's arrest.

Russia fought two wars against separatists in the majority Muslim republic of Chechnya in 1994-1996 and 1999-2009.
