The Moscow Times
30 YEARS
INDEPENDENT NEWS FROM RUSSIA

Saudi Band Mangles Russian Anthem During Putin's First Visit Since 2007

October 15, 2019

Kremlin.ru

Russian President Vladimir Putin showed off his growing Middle East clout on Monday with his first visit to Saudi Arabia in over a decade.

The Saudi military band, however, did not appear to get the memo.

Embed:

During the welcoming ceremony at the royal palace in Riyadh, musicians made Putin and Saudi King Salman stand for an ear-piercing rendition of the Russian national anthem.

Putin showed no signs of anger as the horns hit one false note after another, but his facial expression betrayed a look of weary annoyance.

Russia took vengeance on the brutal Saudi performance in the form of a gifted falcon who promptly defecated on a royal carpet.

The trained gyrfalcon was caught committing the offense on video as Putin handed it to King Salman.

Embed:

> Охотничий кречет Альфа - подарок Владимира Путина королю Саудовской Аравии pic.twitter.com/SnyrYM5IpG
>
> — Дмитрий Смирнов (@dimsmirnov175) October 14, 2019

Original url:
https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2019/10/15/saudi-band-mangles-russian-anthem-during-putins-first-visit-since-2007-a67748