

Russia to Cut Share of Dollar in National Wealth Fund

Next stage of Russia's de-dollarization could impact the ruble's exchange rate.

By Reuters

November 07, 2019

Russia might increase the share of euros in the National Wealth Fund. Yekaterina Kuzmina / RBC / TASS

Russia is planning to lower the share of the U.S. dollar in its National Wealth Fund, part of its sovereign reserves, as it looks to diversify its foreign currency holdings in 2020, a source at the Finance Ministry said on Thursday.

The change in the fund's structure, designed to help Russia manage its pension system, may alter the composition of state foreign-currency purchases in the market, the source said.

Russia has stepped up a so-called de-dollarization process to reduce its dependence on the greenback since 2014 when Moscow's relations with the West deteriorated over Russia's annexation of Crimea and its role in the Ukrainian crisis.

The source at the Finance Ministry, who asked not to be named due to the sensitivity of the issue, said the idea was to bring the structure of the National Wealth Fund closer to that of Russia's international foreign exchange reserves held by the central bank.

Related article: Putin's Dollar Dump Costs Russia \$8Bln

"We're planning to do it quickly, most likely, next year," the source told Reuters.

"We will lower the dollar share to levels close to the structure of the central bank's reserves. We will add reserves currencies as the central bank has in its reserves."

The euro accounted for 30.3% of the central bank's reserves as of Mar. 31. The U.S. dollar's share was 23.6%, the Chinese yuan accounted for 14.2%, and the pound for 6.6%. The Japanese yen, the Canadian dollar and the Australian dollar altogether accounted for 7.1%.

Russia, which reports the reserve structure with a six-month lag, had $542.9 billion in its reserves as of Nov. 1.

In the National Wealth Fund, which is part of the country's sovereign reserves, the dollar accounted for 45.5% at the end of September, according to finance ministry data. The euro's share was 39.17% and the pound accounted for another 7.67%, according to the data. It was unclear what currencies made up the remaining 7.66%.

Related article: Putin's Pledge to Ditch the Dollar Is Slowly Becoming a Reality

A shift in the National Wealth Fund composition may affect the rouble as the central bank carries out daily currency buying on behalf of the finance ministry under the so-called fiscal rule, praised by the International Monetary Fund and rating agencies.

The central bank may cut the amount of dollars it buys, while increasing euro purchases, the source at the finance ministry said.

"But we have not yet discussed it with them," the source said.

Financial authorities do not disclose what foreign exchange they buy on the market. The finance ministry said this week the central bank will purchase 11.4 billion roubles ($178.77 million) worth of foreign exchange a day for state coffers in November.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2019/11/07/russia-cut-dollars-national-wealth-fund-a68080>