

Russia Blames Fatal Plane Crash on Pilots, Including One Who Lied to Get License

By Reuters

November 14, 2019

Wikicommons

A plane crash that killed all 50 people on board at Russia's Kazan Airport in 2013 was the result of errors made by two pilots, including one who got his license using falsified documents, Russian investigators said on Thursday.

The Boeing 737-500 aircraft was operated by the now-defunct Tatarstan Airlines, which later had its license revoked by Russia's Federal Air Transport Agency, Rosaviatsiya.

The plane from Moscow had been trying to abort its landing when it nose-dived into the runway and burst into flames. All 44 passengers and 6 crew members were killed.

The son of the president of the oil-rich province of Tatarstan and the regional head of the FSB intelligence service were among those killed. The dead also included two foreigners, a Briton and a Ukrainian.

Related article: Russia's Aeroflot Denies Having Biggest Pilot Gender Gap

Russia's Investigative Committee said in a statement on Thursday it had concluded its investigation into the crash and said that pilot error was to blame.

It said the aircraft's commander, Rustem Salikhov, did not have sufficient piloting skills and had made a series of errors as had his co-pilot Viktor Gutsul.

It said Salikhov had obtained his pilot's license using falsified documents.

"Salikhov, having no basic knowledge, skills and experience as a pilot, began to carry out passenger air flights as a pilot," it said.

The Investigative Committee said it had charged Valery Portnov, then-deputy general director of Tatarstan Airlines who it said had submitted Salikhov's documents containing false information in 2009.

It said he was being charged with violating air traffic safety rules resulting in the death of two or more people.

The then-regional head of Rosaviatsiya in Tatarstan, Shavkat Umarov, was charged with negligence. Kazan, which is 800 kilometers east of Moscow, is the capital of the mainly Muslim region of Tatarstan.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2019/11/14/russia-blames-fatal-plane-crash-on-pilots-including-one-who-lied-to-get-license-a68175>