

Gazprom Slashes Investment Budget for 2020

With three major pipelines set to come online, Russian gas giant plans to slow down investment spending.

By bne IntelliNews

December 18, 2019

Gazprom is reducing its investment program as major new pipeline projects near completion. TASS

Russia's Gazprom has approved a 16.5% cut in investments next year, marking the second annual reduction in a row, the state gas exporter reported last week.

Gazprom's 2020 capital expenditure plan has been set at 1.1 trillion rubles ($18 billion) by the management committee, pending approval by the company's board of directors. That is down from a projected spend of 1.3 trillion rubles ($21 billion) for this year and a record 1.8 trillion ($29 billion) in 2018.

Gazprom has gained notoriety for its high levels of spending in recent years, with the bulk of investment going towards the development of its three major export projects: the Power of Siberia pipeline to China, the Turk Stream pipeline to southeastern Europe and Nord Stream 2 to Germany. Work on these projects is now winding down, freeing up some capital.

The $55 billion Power of Siberia pipeline began pumping gas to China earlier this month, while the $8 billion Turk Stream to Turkey is targeted for launch in January. However, there may be some delays as Russian President Vladimir Putin claimed at the start of December that Bulgaria is under “international pressure” to delay the pipeline project, while a section via neighboring Serbia is nearly finished.

Related article: Gazprom in \$3Bln Share Sale to Mystery Buyer

The $11 billion Nord Stream 2 is also nearing completion, but is not expected to start up until mid-2020 because of earlier permitting delays in Denmark.

Signalling its greater focus on capital discipline, Gazprom’s management earlier this year pledged to increase dividends to 50% of net profits by 2021, triggering a rally in the company’s share price. They endorsed a plan last week to increase dividends to 30% of income in 2019, followed by 40% in 2020 and 50% in 2021 and beyond.

Shareholders still risk seeing their returns shrink, however, as Gazprom struggles to defend its market share in Europe from soaring liquified natural gas (LNG) imports.

The company saw net profits slump 45% year-on-year in the third quarter to 212 billion rubles ($3.3 billion), after European gas prices fell to their lowest level in 15 years.

The company’s 2020 investment program comprises 933 billion rubles ($15 billion) in capital investments, 90 billion rubles ($1.4 billion) in acquisition spending and 81 billion rubles ($1.3 billion) on long-term financial investments. It plans to borrow 558 billion rubles ($8.9 billion) during the year.

This article first appeared in bne IntelliNews.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2019/12/18/gazprom-cuts-investment-budget-2020-a68661>