

Tatler Becomes First Russian Magazine to Feature Trans Woman on Cover

March 11, 2020

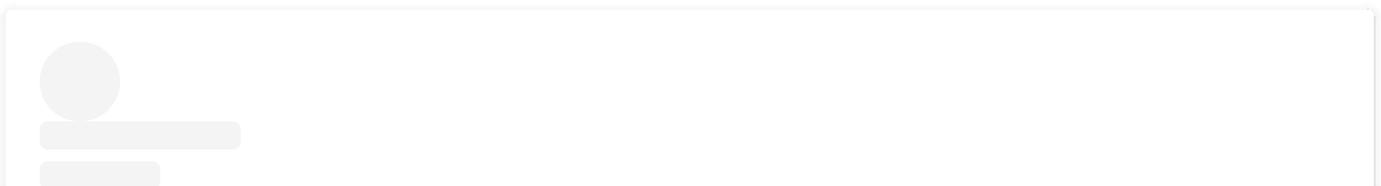

"I want to dedicate [the cover] to those who fight, to those who love and to those who made their choices or [are] on their way to [making] a decision," Maximova wrote. Tatler.ru

Tatler has become Russia's first magazine to feature a transgender woman on its cover, the society magazine announced as its April issue hit newsstands Wednesday.

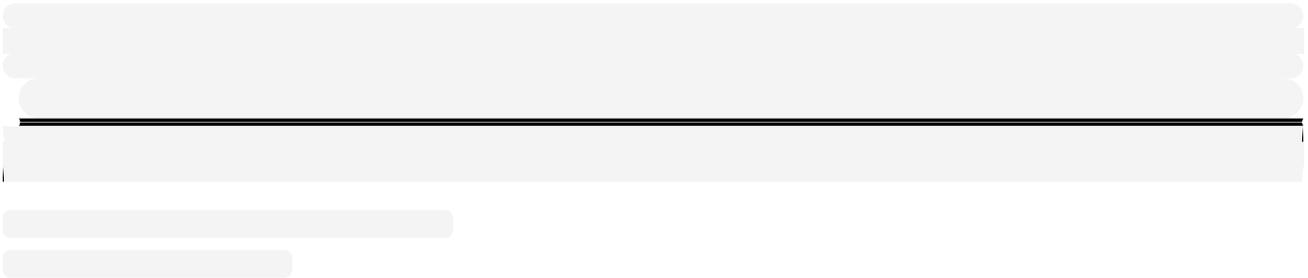

The Kazakh-born, Paris- and Moscow-based socialite Natalia Maximova came out to her Instagram followers in December. In the interview with Tatler's chief editor, Maximova said she "never had the need to come out" until she witnessed and intervened in a confrontational scene in Belgium.

Embed:

View this post on Instagram

A post shared by tatler_russia \(@tatler_russia\) on Mar 10, 2020 at 11:30pm PDT

“I understood then that I have no right not to defend others. I have no right to stay silent,” she said.

Tatler, a Condé Nast publication in Russian circulation since 2008, said it hoped Maximova’s interview “will give hope to those who need it.”

“I want to dedicate [the cover] to those who fight, to those who love and to those who made their choices or [are] on their way to [making] a decision,” Maximova wrote.

At least half a dozen major magazines around the world have featured transgender models on their covers, including Vanity Fair’s 2015 cover of Caitlyn Jenner, who was previously known as former Olympic champion Bruce Jenner.

Embed:

An embed placeholder for an Instagram post. It features a grey profile picture icon in the top left, followed by a grey bar for the name and another for the bio. In the center is a large Instagram camera icon. Below the icon is a blue link that says "View this post on Instagram". The main content area is filled with several horizontal grey bars of varying lengths, representing redacted text. At the bottom, there is a grey bar for the caption, followed by a thin horizontal line and another grey bar for the timestamp. The timestamp text at the bottom reads: "A post shared by NATALYA MAXIMOVA (@maxinatacha) on Dec 6, 2019 at 7:51am PST".

Russia classifies transgender people as mentally ill and requires them to obtain a psychiatric diagnosis of “transsexualism” before receiving prescribed and controlled hormone treatment. Russia is due in 2020 to change its classification to a sexual health issue in line with the World Health Organization’s global manual of diagnoses.

In the absence of official statistics, experts say around 15,000 transgender people live in Russia, or 0.1% of the country’s population.

Related article: Did Russia Register Its First Transgender Marriage?

In a sign of changing attitudes, a transgender woman was rehired and compensated for lost income last year in Russia's first known court case to acknowledge workplace discrimination against a transgender person. An independent poll last spring said that Russian support for the LGBT community had reached a 14-year high.

At the same time, research has found an increase in crimes against members of the LGBT community after Russia passed its so-called “gay propaganda” law in 2013.

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2020/03/11/tatler-becomes-first-russian-magazine-to-feature-trans-woman-on-cover-a69589>