

Putin Sets Off Meme Storm By Comparing Medieval Invaders to Coronavirus Quarantine

During a televised meeting Wednesday, Putin called on his fellow Russians to wait out the nationwide “non-working” month in self-isolation to avoid the further spread of coronavirus — and did so by invoking Russia’s past victories against medieval invaders.

“Everything passes and this will pass. Our country has gone through many serious challenges: When tormented by the Pechenegs and the Cumans, Russia has handled them all. We will defeat this coronavirus contagion,” he said.

The remarks instantly sparked bewilderment — and, as always, lots of memes.

Some of them drew punchlines from the similarity between Pecheneg and pechen’ye, the Russian word for a cookie. Others noted the similarity between Polovtsy, the Russian name for the Cumans, and plov, the popular rice dish.

Many poked fun at Putin's apparent view of the Pechenegs and Cumans — nomadic tribes that raided parts of Russia in the 10th and 11th centuries — as one of the greatest challenges Russia has ever faced. Greater, even, than World War II.

Here's a look at some of the top contenders:

The Pechenegs and Cumans discuss how they'll divide Russia:

- "We'll take the oil, and you'll take the gas?"
- "Okay!"
- "Natasha, are you asleep?"
- "The Polovtsy have tormented us."
- "And the Pechenegs have tormented us, Natash."
- "And the coronavirus infection, Natash, frankly."

The Pechenegs:

- "So, are we on Google Trends?"
- "No, the Polovtsy are there!"
