

Russia's Frozen Ramen Challenge Returns in Below-Zero Temps

December 30, 2020

Doshirak, a South Korean brand of instant ramen, has been a Russian favorite since the 1990s.
Vovan_new / Instagram

While many Russians have altered their New Year's traditions due to the pandemic this year, some holiday traditions remain unchanged — the New Year tree, Olivier salad, freezing temperatures and...the frozen instant noodles challenge.

Embed:

Посмотреть эту публикацию в Instagram

Публикация от Женя (@johnny_vk)

What now seems like a stereotypically Russian form of entertainment was actually invented by a French-Italian research team at a research station in Antarctica in 2018. Researchers took a viral picture of pasta on a fork frozen in mid-air at minus 60 degrees Celsius. The idea was quickly picked up by residents of Siberia and Russia's Arctic who don't have to travel far in search of extreme weather conditions.

Embed:

Посмотреть эту публикацию в Instagram

Публикация от Владимир Янин (@vavan_new)

Russians modified the original Italian pasta version to feature Doshirak noodles, a popular South Korean instant ramen brand.

Embed:

Посмотреть эту публикацию в Instagram

Публикация от Гаврил Старостин (@gavril.starostin)

This winter, the challenge witnessed a rebirth with this viral tweet that featured a photo of frozen cup noodles and a soft-boiled egg.

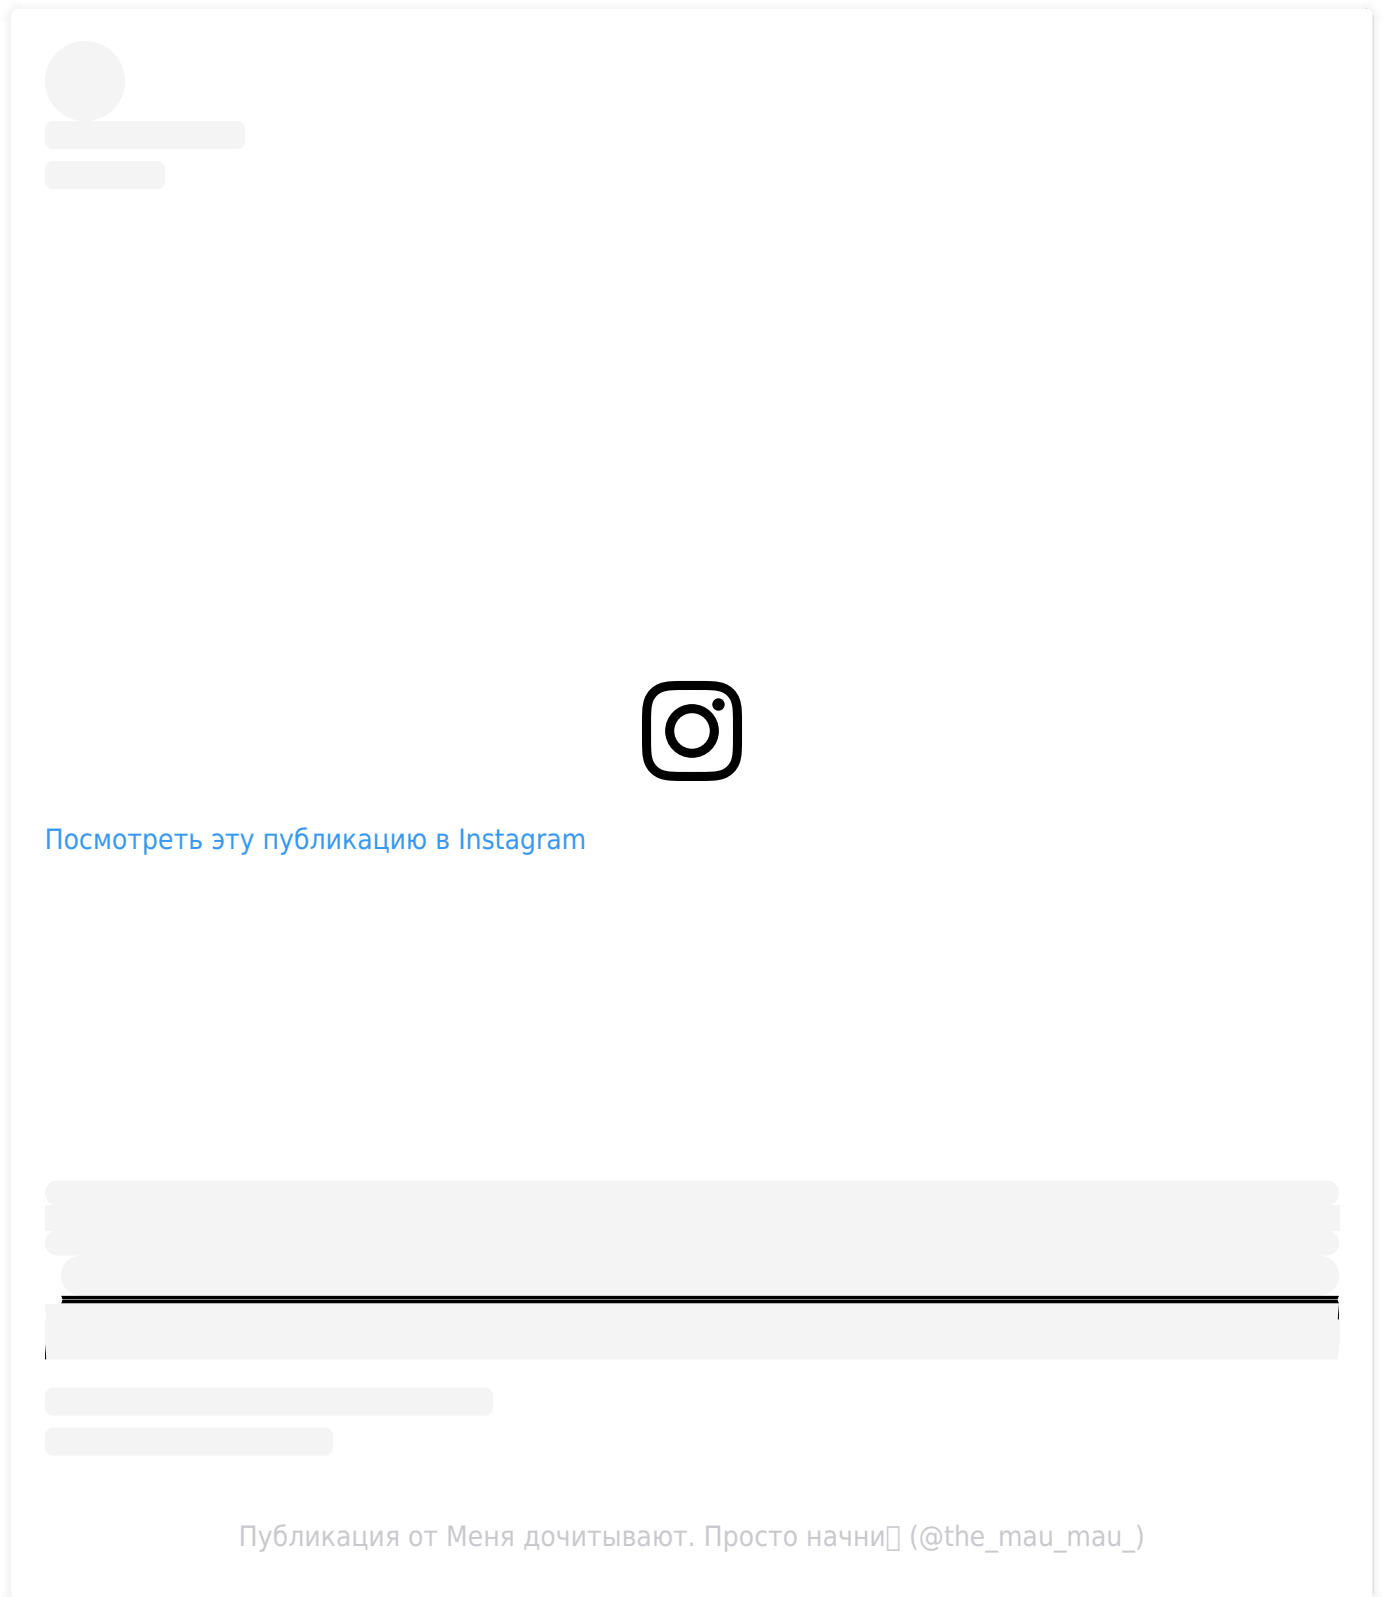

Embed:

Today it's -45C (-49F) in my hometown Novodibirsk, Siberia.
pic.twitter.com/EGxYrRqdE2

— Oleg (@olegsvn) December 27, 2020

Some Siberia natives went a step further, inviting their followers to enjoy a frozen Doshirak picnic between outdoor swimming sessions at minus 30 C.

Embed:

Russians have found that instant noodles aren't the only thing capable of freezing into Instagram art — pictures of wet laundry make a good addition.

Embed:

The viral challenge of throwing boiling water into the air outdoors that took the U.S. by storm last winter remains popular in Russia.

Embed:

Посмотреть эту публикацию в Instagram

Публикация от [O.L.E.S.Y.A] (@o.l.e.s.y.a_o.k)

And with temperatures already dropping below minus 40 C in some places, residents of Russia's coldest regions will have many more opportunities for freezing photo challenges throughout the winter.

Embed:

Посмотреть эту публикацию в Instagram

Публикация от Катерина Баяова (@katerina_bayova)

Embed:

Посмотреть эту публикацию в Instagram

Публикация от Сардана (@sardana.ksy)

Embed:

Посмотреть эту публикацию в Instagram

Публикация от Anastasia Lapina | PARIS (@lapina.colada.stylist)

Original url:

<https://www.themoscowtimes.com/2020/12/30/russias-frozen-ramen-challenge-returns-in-below-zero-tempers-a72520>